PART ONE: READING:(14pts)

Read the text carefully then do the activities

The civilizations of the past whether they developed in Asia and in Africa or in Europe and South America had many features in common. They all shared aspects which historians today are trying to uncover and bring to our knowledge. No matter the geographical distance and centuries separating them, their study reveals that there are important areas where their similarity is striking and the gap holding them apart is quite narrow.

When we look at the Egyptians, the Chinese, the Babylonians, the Incas and the Greeks, we realise that none of them succeeded to become prosperous until they had laid the basis for the existence of a powerful state that imposed order and law both inside their countries and outside their borders. They also formed well-organised armies that protected them from potential invaders and helped them to conquer other lands in order to widen their sources of income and establish their authority. The other element that was present in each of those glorious nations was the development of trade either at the local level or even in the frame involving foreign communities.

We notice, too, that the civilizations of the past made slavery a practice that was not only tolerated but also legalised. It was the same attitude as regards social inequality which was often considered as a reality belonging to the natural order of things against no solution was possible. Besides, immense efforts were devoted for the erection of gigantic constructions, which in addition to satisfy practical aims, were expected to perpetuate the memory and the glory of the rulers who were eager to defy time and immortalise their names.
