

English First Term Exam

Life has changed

Back in the 1900s life was not the same as today. Most people got up at dawn to do their chores. Some of the chores were milking cows, collecting eggs, and cutting firewood.

The children got ready for school and most of them walked a mile or two to get to school. The basic subjects were math, reading, and writing. After school they helped their parents around the house. At night, they did their homework and went to bed early; they never had much time to play.

The average house had two or three rooms. The kitchen had a sink, a wood burning stove, a table and chairs. Since there was no electric refrigerator they used an ice box or an ice house to store food. When the chores were done they had dinner. Most of the food was grown in the garden like tomatoes, onions, carrots, peppers and potatoes.

Today we don't have to work as much as they did back then and we have more time to play. We have electric cars and electric stoves so everything is a little bit easier.
